The informal fortnightly subscription dance at McRae's for the Helianthus, Varsity and Tivoli sets have been well attended all season but promise to be additionally popular during Lent when there is nothing else doing. Pious girls who wouldn't think of going to a regular Helianthus, Varsity or Tivoli dance in Lent, attend the subscriptions because they are "informal," probably on the theory that it isn't wicked to dance in Lent if you don't wear evening clothes or ride in a carriage and if your self-indulgence deprives the heathen of only 60 cents. Anyway, there were girls last night kicking up their heels as high as anybody in the barn dance who, when they attend the Lenten services look as if butter wouldn't melt in their mouths and they had no thoughts for anything except the Book of Common Prayer and no interests less frivolous than those of the altar guild. The company last night included: Miss Margaret Garvey, Miss Nadine Lytle, Miss Mary Sutherland, Miss Mildred Guild, Miss Bertha Hull, Miss Esther Rogers, Miss Edith Hart, Miss Emma Davis, Miss Edith Frizzell, Miss Marjorie Whitney, Miss Julia Wellhouse, Miss Marie Lagerstrom, Miss Dorothy Scott, Miss Helen Johnston, Miss Grace Kountz, Miss Vera Langdon, Miss Marguerite Mills, Miss Allie Wingett, Miss Lucrèce Whitmer, Miss Mary Dallas Gage, Miss Clyde Bonebrake, Mr. Dana Parkhurst, Mr. Jay Closs, Mr. Arthur Wolf, Mr. Harry Wolf, Mr. Arch Pavey, Mr. Emil Brown, Mr. Harry Engle, Mr. Carl Trapp, Mr. Dick Reed, Mr. Freston Coleman, Mr. Arthur Shelton, Mr. Clarence Jordan, Mr. Arthur Shelton, Mr. Paul Money Penny, Mr. Hugh McFarland, Mr. Theodore Zercher, Mr. Bruce McFarland, Mr. Allan McNeal, Mr. Roy Johnson, Mr. John Hobart, Mr. Leslie Rowles, Mr. Robert Steele, Mr. Irvin Platt, Mr. Alexander Loomis and Mr. Omar Smith.

which was a deeper shade of gray than the voile. The bodice is draped, and is trimmed with the liberty satin. The sleeves are puffed and finished with the lace.

The Merton boys (there are four of them—all leave in their respective sets) had been talking about the barn dance when their father came to and out from behind his newspaper and asked "Who's building a barn?" After they all had their laugh Jack Merton, who is getting old and fat and hasn't worked out on the barn dance yet, drew a "Well you tell whoever's building it to build a box stall for me."

gown sketched, the strap trimming being crossed over flat lace, the lace also being let into the skirt, under similar bands. The skirt of the gown was cut in a two-piece circular, and had a sweep all around, with a decided train in the back.

BOOK REVIEW

Isaac N. Stevens, publisher of the Public Opinion, has entered the literary field with a novel he calls "The Liberator," just published by the B. W. Dodge company of New York.

"The Liberator" is a political story. Its dedication shows that it was written for a purpose, viz.: To point out the obstacles to a successful public career for the honorably ambitious youth of America.

Early in the book the author brushes aside the cobwebs of prejudice usually raised against the frank and honest discussion of public questions in this country, and through a veritable Harriet Taylor in knowledge of American economics he has a beautiful and wealthy woman inspire two young men with the patriotism required to bring about a betterment of our social and governmental conditions.

Gertrude Strong is a remarkable woman, not one easily welded out of any one of a dozen American women, some of whom the author undoubtedly had in mind in creating this character.

The author is an ardent champion of the equal rights of women in all governmental matters and his characters demonstrate how wholly unnecessary it is for women to lose any of their femininity or grace while engaged in that work.

The chief hero of the story—George Randolph—receives a dying charge from his father, an Illinois farmer and veteran of the civil war, to enter public life "but only in such a way that you can be of real service to mankind."

At Harvard, Randolph meets Frederic Ames, the son of one of the great railway magnates of the country and they become fast friends. It is with difficulty that Ames induces Randolph to go with him to his home in New York city, but finally, at the Easter vacation of their junior year in the law school, he accepts and spends the week at the Ames home in New York.

There he meets Gertrude Strong, next to Mr. Ames the largest stockholder in his enterprises, the daughter of a great railway builder of the Northwest and a widow of a former general manager of the Ames roads in that section of the country. She is a young woman about 28 years of age, but her father had early taught her economics and she had just returned from taking a course of lectures at Cambridge, England, where Randolph met her.

The death of her father had not silently helped to give her life to the service of mankind. At the dinner which followed Randolph's arrival a very interesting discussion took place as to the opportunities for a young man to achieve honorable fame in public life under existing political conditions.

It must be remembered that this story deals with affairs for the four years succeeding the next presidential election.

Randolph also meets Frederic Ames' two sisters, Margaret and Virginia, who are visiting in New York. He and the Ames family become great friends, and he spends a week with them in southern Italy the next September and during a trip visits them through the great west the next summer.

The story abounds in strong political discussion and startling political situations, in beautiful mountain legends and romantic love scenes.

Hardly has the Macmillan company completed the publication of Mr. Algernon Graves' monumental work, "The Royal Academy of Arts: A Complete Dictionary of Contributors and Their Work," in eight volumes, when an announcement comes of a new work of even greater interest to students and connoisseurs of art. This is "A Catalogue Raisonne of the Works of the Seventeenth Century," based on the work of John Smith, by Dr. C. Hofstede de Groot, translated by Edme de Groot.

The work is to be completed in ten volumes, octavo, and the first volume has just appeared. It deals with the works of Jan Stakes, Gabriel Metsu, Gerard Dou, Pieter de Hooch, Carel Fabritius and Johannes Vermeer.

The literature of religious motive is sought with a slow but steady undecurrent demand. Among the reprints for the month the Harpers announce God in His World, by Hendrick. This is a book which avoids differences of creed, calls upon the brotherly spirit for right living, and points to the lessons of science, which are the lessons of "God in His World." Dr. Alden called his book in secondary title, An Interpretation.

HYPNOTIZED BY A WIDOW.

Applicant for Divorce Says He Was Married Against His Will.

New York, March 7.—Claiming that he was hypnotized and forced while in that condition to marry a woman twice his age, Alexander Vazakos, a young Greek, yesterday applied to the court for an annulment of his marriage. Vazakos is a student at Columbia university and says that he met at his home in Athens, where his father is a wealthy business man, Louise Xenia, a widow nearly 60 year old. She was wealthy and attractive, he said, and while teaching him German, obtained an influence over him which he could not withstand. Finally, he told the court, the woman led him before a priest. There he claims to have lost consciousness and when he recovered his senses he was told that he had been married to the widow. As soon as he could escape he left Athens and came to America. The woman who claims to be his wife followed him to New York and did everything in her power to make him return to her. Finally he succeeded in eluding her and she returned to Greece. George Liras, another Greek student, told the court that he had a similar experience with the widow, but had escaped from her influence before she was married to her. The court demanded further evidence which Vazakos promised to produce next week.

BABY WORTH $5,000.

It Is a Young Hippo and Was Born in Central Park Zoo.

New York, March 7.—New York club is $100 richer today by reason of a birth which occurred at Central Park Zoo yesterday. The new arrival at the zoo is a baby hippopotamus, the son of a hippo who came from California. The new arrival is said to be a fine specimen of the breed, but the public has not yet been allowed to view the new-born hippo, in which the new-born hippo was born, having been closed until Sunday, when the baby will hold a public reception.

The baby, which has been named Calliope II, weighs 60 pounds, about double the average weight of born animals of the breed, and is the eighth hippo to be born in Central Park. Miss Murphy has long been one of the chief attractions of the zoo. Her mate, Calliope, lived to a ripe old age in the park, and only died a couple of months ago. The hippos in the Bronx zoo are descendants of Miss Murphy and Calliope.
